This is the screen shot of this key in a Database recovery software which I used. A: From Microsoft support: This process did not work and I ended up restoring the image using a different method. Log in to Azure Log in to the Microsoft portal. Search for "Backup and Restore" and click on "Backup and restore to a storage account". Search for your Backup vault name. Select the Backup vault and click on "Restore an image from vault". And from there: In this article, Azure Backup allows you to restore the access policies for your organization. Azure Backup Agent allows you to transfer backup policies between on-premises, Azure, or Office 365 locations. Azure Backup Agent simplifies the process of backing up policies with minimal intervention from the administrator. Create a new backup vault. In the Backup vault Settings page, specify the type of backup vault. Click Use default settings. Specify the location of the new backup vault. If you have multiple backup vault locations, choose the backup vault you want to use. Click Create. Select the backup vault name. You can select a template for backup policies in the Backup policies page. Then you can import a backup policy template. Import a backup policy template: After you've imported the template, you can download the data. If you import a backup template that is already in the backup vault, the backup jobs will be displayed in the backup jobs page. Medroxyprogesterone treatment for women with severe anovulation during COS-treatment for ovarian hyperstimulation syndrome: A systematic review. Anovulation contributes to development of ovarian hyperstimulation syndrome (OHSS). To determine whether progestogen-aided ovulation can be used in the treatment of severe an
