Early life Born Mary Taylor in Southwark, London, Wright moved to Kings Lynn, Norfolk, and began writing songs at age fourteen. Her first experience as an artist was as part of a folk music group, Anita, led by Anita Stembridge, with whom she shared the stage. Career While working as a graphic designer, she self-released a 45 rpm record called "A-Head" in 1969. The B-side "Slow Down" was recorded by Wright on her reel-to-reel tape recorder. It was released by the UK label, Chequered Sunbeam. The A-side was written by Wright and Ian Ingham from the Ingham Brothers, and the lyrics were written by Willie Christie. The line "All I'm asking is you/please slow down" was also used by Peggy Seeger in her 1971 recording of the song. Her debut single, "A-Head", spent seven weeks in the British charts, peaking at number 2, before being covered by the Hollies. Wright would later recall how she was advised to become an "artiste" when her career began to wane, instead of focusing on her artistic development. She was also advised to learn how to cook before pursuing her music career, or else she would be doomed to become a domestic drudge. After her "A-Head" success, she released five more albums, the first being Nobody at the Gates of Your Heart, followed by Between the Gate and the Sea, Blame It on Me and Back in the Quiet Room. Wright was discovered by the English musician Robert Wyatt, who encouraged her to record an album based on Bob Dylan's John
