Field of the Invention This invention relates to a manual positioning mechanism for a valve, valve stem, or the like and is particularly adapted for use with a butterfly valve to position the valve stem for opening or closing the valve. 2. Prior Art The prior art manual positioning devices for a butterfly valve stem are normally in the form of a manually adjustable hand wheel or spindle on which the stem is mounted and a pawl mechanism which is attached to the valve stem and engages the hand wheel. The hand wheel may be rotated manually to displace the pawl on the stem to position the valve stem and thus the valve between open and closed positions. There are numerous problems attendant with the prior art manual positioning devices. Generally, the pawls are not satisfactory for operation in the harsh environment of a valve and are subject to early failure. Furthermore, the prior art manual positioning devices include components which are cumbersome to use. Attempts have been made to solve these problems by the use of a floating collar and pawls and use of a direct current motor to rotate the floating collar and change the operating position of the pawls. Although these attempts may solve the problems, these solutions are more complex and expensive than is desired. The valve stem has a small diameter relative to that of the stationary valve seat and is inserted into a valve body by means of a shaft which is inserted in a passage in the valve body. The shaft is locked in the passage by a valve plug in the valve body
