Keep your investments on track, increase your chances of winning at poker, and even lower your taxes, with Fund Manager Advisor! Fund Manager Advisor was reviewed by ayokbodju, on July 10th, 2014Q: Can I use obj.constructor? I use this kind of code in one project: function B() { } A.B = B; Object.getPrototypeOf(A.B).constructor = Object; If I do A.b = new B(); it is good. But I want to get the prototype: A.b.constructor I think I should not use "constructor" word. How can I use "constructor" word? A: For the prototype, the constructor property is the one you want: function B() { } B.prototype = Object.create(A.B.prototype); The this.constructor thing is something you'd use when you want to refer to the constructor function itself (constructor is also the "constructor" property, but is slightly different). If you wanted to refer to the constructors of all the inherited instances from A, you'd use A.B.prototype.constructor; Q: Append/prepend is wrong on jQuery I'm using this script to achieve a insert before, but when I try to use this script, the HTML is not the same as the original one. this is the original html code: after using this script: jQuery(".splashpics").each(function () { var tahiti = jQuery(this).prev(); var tahiti2 = tahiti.clone(); tahiti.after(tahiti2); }); the HTML after using this script is: Can anyone help me to figure out how to solve this problem? Thanks. A: You are using prev() method, you should use first() jQuery(".splashpics").each(function () { var tahiti = jQuery(this).first(); var tahiti2 = tahiti.clone(); tahiti.after(tahiti2); }); This will work.
