Look at the third-party toolbars from {CodeGear}, or the 2nd-party (free) toolbars from {QuickBuilder. Evidence of the presence of HIV infection in a number of neurological diseases has led to the development of antiviral therapy for HIV-infected patients suffering from neurological diseases. We have shown that combination antiretroviral therapy (cART) given soon after onset of experimental autoimmune encephalomyelitis (EAE) prevents further disease progression. We have demonstrated that the most effective component of the cART, tenofovir disoproxil fumarate (TDF), is neuroprotective in an animal model of multiple sclerosis. We will test the hypothesis that this neuroprotection is mediated through the blockade of apoptosis and the suppression of cellular activation, proliferation, and recruitment in the brain. Our studies demonstrate that: 1) The first clinically-available HIV-infected patient to receive cART was diagnosed with acute HIV encephalitis (HIVE) and the patient died from complications of HIVE.2) Tenofovir
