Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to a HVAC system for a vehicle and, more particularly, to a HVAC system that may be configured to operate in two modes for two different conditions and a method thereof. 2. Description of the Related Art Many vehicles, including but not limited to passenger vehicles, include one or more air conditioning systems configured to condition the air within the passenger compartments of the vehicles. For example, a typical vehicle air conditioning system may include a cooling system with an evaporator, a compressor, an evaporator fan motor, and a condenser. The cooling system cools the air within the passenger compartment of the vehicle by absorbing heat from the air and then transferring the heat to air passing over the evaporator and condensing the heat into water as the air passes over the condenser. The air conditioning system may also include a heater system with a blower, a heater core, and an expansion valve. The blower circulates air from a location within the passenger compartment through the heater core to warm the passenger compartment. The heater system may also have a valve arrangement configured to control the flow of air through the expansion valve and heater core. In operation of the air conditioning system, the evaporator fan motor is activated to direct air over the evaporator for heat transfer. The blower fan is activated to circulate the cooled air through the passenger compartment and over the condenser to absorb heat from the heat. The valve arrangement is activated in a predetermined manner to deliver air through the heater core for heat transfer. The heater fan motor may also be activated to direct air over the heater core. The air conditioning system may further include a control that receives various signals from different components of the air conditioning system and in response to the received signals operates the various components of the air conditioning system for heat transfer.
