Although Photoshop has many tools, presets, and options, this tutorial will teach you how to quickly create a simple flyer for your next event. The process includes using only the tools that are included in Photoshop without choosing a preset. Learning Photoshop is best done by getting hands-on experience. The best way to learn Photoshop is by creating your own work. If you are taking a course in Photoshop, consider paying for a copy of Photoshop, as it is a lot less expensive than other image editors. It is the software used by professionals and not a glorified paint program. Creating a simple Photoshop flyer that looks good and works can be done in a very short time span, regardless of the image size or resolution. For this tutorial, you will need: A blank Adobe Photoshop canvas file Adobe Photoshop Creative Suite 3 or newer (at the least CS3) Adobe Illustrator file Flyer design file (.psd) The Photoshop file itself will be included in the tutorial. You will use it to overlay the image with graphics and other elements. If you do not have Photoshop, you can use another image editing program such as GIMP or Adobe Photoshop Elements. You will do all of the work with these programs so they are not necessary. 1. Open Photoshop and create a new document. In Photoshop, create a new document for your new flyer. Keep the default size of the document at 2 inches in height and 300 pixels in width. This should be enough space to accommodate the graphics and text you create later in the tutorial. 2. Choose File > Choose File > Open. Select your .psd file and open it. 3. Select the Horizontal Size and Width options The next section of this tutorial is about resizing the template. Therefore, we need to resize the document to match the template. You can resize the document by holding down the Alt key (Windows) or Command key (Mac). While holding down the Alt key, drag the document until the desired width is reached. In this case, we will resize to 500 pixels. Once you've reached 500 pixels, release the Alt key. While holding down the Command key, drag the document until the desired height is reached. In this case, we will resize to 2 inches. Once you've reached 2 inches, release the Command key. 4. Choose File > Save When you are finished with the

The effects of intratunical lidocaine on the sciatic nerve in rats. The neurotoxic effects of lidocaine on peripheral nerves have been reported. It has been reported that intratunical injection of lidocaine had been effective in the prevention of chronic pain. We designed this study to investigate the neurotoxic effects of intratunical lidocaine on the sciatic nerve using electrophysiology, histological and molecular biology. The sciatic nerve was exposed and injected with 0.2 ml of lidocaine. We compared the effects of intratunical injection of lidocaine on the sciatic nerve between control and the experimental groups at 1, 5, 10, 15, and 20 days. Nerve conduction velocity (NCV) was measured by electro-physiological studies. Morphological examination was conducted by light and transmission electron microscopy. Nerve conduction velocity of the experimental group was lower than that of the control group and the experimental group was improved by the injection of lidocaine. Morphological changes were seen in the myelinated nerve fibers of the nerve of the experimental group. These nerve fibers exhibited apoptotic changes and were decreased. TUNEL assay was employed to determine the role of apoptosis. Apoptotic index in the experimental group was higher than that of the control group. The morphological changes and the electrophysiological changes of the sciatic nerve suggest that the injection of lidocaine causes neurotoxicity in the sciatic nerve and that lidocaine injection improved the damage caused by the necrosis and axon degeneration in the sciatic nerve. By Rachel Wallis BBC News It is a question that has puzzled scientists for centuries, and one that has now been solved after an international collaboration of researchers from the UK and Germany compared the DNA of 80 people from across Europe. The scientists say the results show there was a single large population that lived in the Mediterranean some 15,000 years ago. The team compared DNA in the mitochondria, tiny structures inside the cell that contain their own circular genomes. "We are fairly certain that the whole of modern Europe and the Near East came out of this one dominant population," explained Dr Anne Brown, from the University of Leicester. The team found that the mitochondrial genome - called the mitogenome - from all the other people they looked at matched that of the Neolithic farmer who lived in a cave in the south of France some 15,000 years ago. The findings suggest the population was

When President Donald Trump said during the 2016 presidential campaign that he was appointing a special counsel to investigate the probe of his campaign's ties to Russia, Democrats and establishment Republicans alike expressed outrage — a sign of what they called Trump's "constant abuse" of his executive authority. But in a July 9 interview with CBS' "60 Minutes," Trump was much more reserved, characterizing the situation as "a witch hunt." He said people "have to be careful because they're going to ruin people for life. Look what's happened to [former FBI Director James] Comey." Some commentators also suggested Trump's approach in the interview was because of the interview's timing. But a closer look at the interview suggests Trump's comments were more consistent with his view that the FBI used the "witch hunt" and ruined people's lives. Here's a timeline of Trump's comments about the investigation: June 27, 2016 Trump reads a June 27 interview in which Comey said "the bureau would leave no stone unturned" in its probe of Hillary Clinton's emails. "I think it's horrible," Trump says. A day later, he goes a step further on Twitter, saying: "Wow, FBI said 'no' to Hillary exoneration — but added 'more emails' to her crimes & will not say what she erased AFTER receiving a subpoena." On June 29, he cites the report: "FBI confirms: 'Crooked Hillary compromised our national security. 110(b)... Comey can't find my 'missing' EMAILS. What does that mean? They lost them! That is so illegal!" July 8, 2016 On July 8, Comey told a Senate panel he had no intention of recommending charges against Clinton. "Had I believed she was guilty of a crime, I would have recommended that the Department of Justice prosecute that offense," he said. But, he added, "We did not come to a conclusion one way or the other." Trump calls that statement "disgraceful." He adds: "The FBI will never be able to erase the stigma of this horrible mistake." In a tweet on July 9, Trump says: "The FBI told Hillary Clinton's lawyers — finally — that they are dropping the case." July 9, 2016 In an interview with "60 Minutes," Trump says: "They put in this report. One of the reasons I think I got a
