Guarantee that a binary tree will have at least N leaves? There are some trees where most nodes are leaves. Is there a measure (in other words, an integer $N \in \mathbb{Z}$) so that we can guarantee that any arbitrary binary tree has at least N leaves? If the answer for general trees is negative, are there special trees (such as regular binary trees) for which this is true?

A: Assume that there is a tree T with N internal nodes, all of which are leaves. Then $2^N \geq N \binom{N}{2}$. And the left-hand side is a non-increasing function of N ; hence, for each N , there is an N for which the inequality is satisfied. A: Suppose you have a tree with $\leq N$ internal nodes, i.e. that isomorphic to a binary tree. Then by induction, there are at least as many leaves as internal nodes: $\binom{N}{2} \geq \#\{\text{leaves}\} \geq 1 \implies N \geq 1$
