Young, kind-hearted and single mother Annabelle née Greenway has one goal: to be the best witch her father, Dr. Porky Gibbons.

Q: Two dimensional Numpy array with Python I want to create a two dimensional matrix in Python with a numpy array, but I can't get the rows and columns to be on the same level, the rows are always the columns are the rows. How do I make two dimensional numpy array with rows on the second dimension? This is what I have now: `def make_matrix(size): matrix = numpy.zeros((size,size), dtype=numpy.int) for row in range(size): for column in range(size): matrix[row][column] = 2 return matrix`

A: To create a two-dimensional matrix with columns and rows on the same level, you simply use `np.array()` instead of `numpy.zeros()`. Use a nested loop instead of a nested for-loop: `def make_matrix(size): matrix = np.array([[2]*size for i in range(size)]).astype(np.int) return matrix` Alternatively, you could use `np.matrix()` and then specify a new dimension for each axis: `def make_matrix2(size): matrix = np.matrix([[2]*size for i in range(size)]) return matrix.reshape(-1)` Note that you didn't actually create your matrix in your question, but just named it matrix.

The Kirkus Prize is one of the richest literary awards in the world, with a prize of $50,000 bestowed annually to authors of fiction, nonfiction and young readers' literature. It was created to celebrate the 81 years of discerning, thoughtful criticism Kirkus Reviews has contributed to both the publishing industry and readers at large. Books that earned the Kirkus Star with publication dates between November 1, 2014, and October 31, 2015, are automatically nominated for the 2015 Kirkus Prize, and the winners will be selected on October 23, 2015, by an esteemed panel composed of nationally respected writers and highly regarded booksellers.
