a certain word with the value of another column of another row in a dataframe? I am very new to Python and I have been trying to figure out this problem for two hours now.
I feel like it's very basic but I just cannot wrap my head around it. I have a dataframe in the following form: `import pandas as pd df = pd.DataFrame({'song1': ['foo', 'bar', 'foo', 'foo', 'foo', 'bar'], 'song2': ['foo', 'bar', 'foo', 'foo', 'foo', 'bar']})` `df['rating'] = ['p1', 'p2', 'p3', 'p1', 'p1', 'p2']` I want to replace the 'foo' in every row with the rating given. If the song is 'foo', I want it to replace it with the rating of the first song. I know that for replacing a value in a row, it would be something like this: `df.loc[0, 'song1'] = 'P1'` but that does not seem to work in my case. If I do `df.loc[0, 'song1'] = df.loc[0, 'rating'][0]` I get

What's new:

I used to live in a weathered house built in the 1920s, steeped in Appalachia. The “house” was actually 16 units, ranged along three parallel narrow streets. There were five buildings, all very similar. At the southern end was the one unit, red in color, with the painted-yellow handicapped symbol in the window. At the northern end was the small cement foundation that housed a series of garages. At the back was a field with patches of decayed pecan trees and spring wildflowers. Just across a small river I could hear the shrieks of bluegrass waterfowl, and I couldn’t wait to hear it again. Very few of the neighbors were committed to keeping the community clean and well maintained, but I couldn’t abide the opulence of the houses where I didn't live. Every few weeks when the local high school shut down for the summer, I'd move all my clothes and books upstairs. It took me longer to pack those than it did to unpack them. I'd remember long conversations in those underground vaulted spaces, with slender light pouring in the top of the door and then overhead, and removing a large manila envelope to remove two rolls of black and white photos and two or three thick books, my father's letters and tales of his childhood. I didn't always take advantage of the community. At the time I lived there, it was run by the local church, as many are, and there was no communal space for children to play. And I was 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16. So by the time I moved away, the community was not my community. Thoreau says in The Maine Woods that those who dwell alone make their poor companionship the cheapest. However, I saw that the red house, in spite of the disrepair, had more charm than the others. And being the current house of my neighbor-protector, I considered the possibility that the isolation of 16 years would not be so bad. Then, one year, I moved into the red house next to the community building. The house was a comfortable but modest two-story walk-up with a cozy fireplace and a study with walls so thin it was possible to hear the low-level coughing of the dog just a few feet away on the other side of the floorboards. The guy living there, he'd
