I'm confused with the scala documentation for tests regarding mocks. It says that shouldRead, mustRead, shouldNotRead are used for creating the right behaviour for your mock. So I thought that the following should work: class MockClass1(val name: String) { override def shouldRead = name! = "test" } But I get an error: [error] /Users/craven/repo/test/src/main/scala/Test.scala:15: shouldRead does not take parameters [error] override def shouldRead = name! = "test" [error] ^ So can anyone explain me what I'm doing wrong? A: The documentation lists three different shouldBe and three different shouldNotBe methods. The method shouldRead is only a convenience method that wraps the three methods: def shouldRead[T](bearer: T) = shouldBe(bearer, bearer) When there is no context, that's how the shouldBe and shouldNotBe methods are accessed. More generally, you can find the full set of methods for the different types on the Scaladoc. package cn.crossbow.common; import java.io.File; import java.io.IOException; / * ██████████ * * @author sunag * @date 2014-11-26 */ public class ExceptionLogger { private static final Logger LOGGER = Logger.getLogger(ExceptionLogger.class); / * ██████████ * * @param msg *
