A: If your Windows is a bit buggy (like mine) when running an older version of Malwarebyte, the new version will probably ask you to update. However, if you get a message like "This version of Malwarebytes Anti-Malware has detected a problem and needs to close" or something like that, you need to change the version of Malwarebyte that's running. In this situation, just download the latest version from the Downloads page and it will run. If you are concerned about security, AV-Comparatives or other AV-programs might be of interest to you. Interpretation of flow-reversal sign in cerebral venous sinus thrombosis. Anticoagulation is the cornerstone of management of cerebral venous sinus thrombosis (CVST). Bedside Doppler ultrasonography (DUS) can be used to follow the effects of anticoagulation and to identify potential complications. Interpretation of the flow-reversal sign (FRS) in CVST is a subject of some controversy. There is one study which suggests that the disappearance of the FRS is an independent predictor of thrombosis resolution. As the FRS may also disappear after anticoagulation with heparin, it is necessary to determine if the disappearance of the FRS is an early indicator of clinical recovery. In addition, the FRS may persist after thrombosis resolution with anticoagulation and so detecting the persistence of the FRS may be important in identifying residual thrombosis. We performed a retrospective review of records for patients with CVST diagnosed by magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) or DUS with positive FRS in cerebral or internal jugular veins. The prevalence and resolution of the FRS was assessed in five subgroups of patients-based on age, sex, underlying disorders, and the timing of anticoagulation-and compared with data from the literature. The mean duration of anticoagulation for all patients was 12.5 weeks (range: 4-36 weeks). The prevalence and duration of the FRS were: thrombosis (n = 23, 100%), thrombus (n = 9, 39%), thrombosis and thrombus (n = 4, 17%), and thrombosis and thrombus with intracranial venous reflux (n = 5, 22%). The prevalence of the FRS for patients in the
