Transmyocardial administration of pinacidil may be effective in the prevention of myocardial ischemia-reperfusion injury, since its protective effect had been shown in experimental studies. However, continuous infusion of pinacidil may not be practical in clinical applications. Thus, we investigated the cardioprotective effect of continuous infusion of pinacidil after the onset of myocardial ischemia in an experimental canine model. Forty-five dogs were randomly allocated to one of two groups; the treatment group (n = 27) received continuous infusion of pinacidil (3 micrograms/kg/min) beginning at the onset of myocardial ischemia, and the control group (n = 18) received a saline infusion. The heart rate, ST segment elevation and the epicardial QT interval were measured continuously for 120 minutes and myocardial blood flow was measured continuously for 90 minutes. The area at risk was determined using technetium-99m-labeled macroaggregated albumin. The hemodynamic parameters except blood pressure in the treatment group were significantly better than those in the control group at 30 and 45 minutes e79caf774b
