[Enhanced chemosensitivity and optimal intensive chemotherapy schedule for multiple brain metastasis from lung cancer]. A man with brain metastasis from lung cancer received standard chemotherapy with carboplatin (CDDP) and etoposide (VP-16) up to 25

mg/m², 5-FU, ADM, and UFT in addition to whole brain irradiation. However, it was ineffective. He then received methotrexate (MTX) 1 g/m² and CDDP 8 mg/m² in addition to the present chemotherapies. The MTX and CDDP regimens induced severe nausea and myelosuppression. To make up for these problems, we added folic acid and G-CSF. After addition of these drugs, MTX and CDDP regimens were effective, resulting in shortening of the therapeutic course and marked improvement of quality of life. We discuss the present chemotherapies
