I have a .NET driver for MongoDB that's written in C#. For collections with non-unique identifiers, I now want to add a field that returns a BsonValue. This is how it looks at the moment: public string Name { get; set; } public BsonValue Value { get; set; } Whenever Name is being queried, it is not possible to use the Value field because that would require a call to the driver. That means that instead of using this MongoDB query: db.Customer.find({"Name": "John" }) I need to build this query to make sure that the driver actually gets the right field and not the Value field: db.Customer.find({"Name": "John" }, {"Value": ""}) It seems to be possible to obtain a BsonValue in C# for non-scalar fields, but it's not possible to obtain a BsonValue for the Collection type. Could somebody enlighten me here? A: This should be possible using the CodeProject article on serializing MongoDB Documents to JSON. From the article: You can't call the MongoDB driver directly in this case but you can use the MongoDB.NET driver from Code Project. They implemented a JSON serializer for the driver and it is working for even complex type. It was even tested against the query result you've given, see how you can get values from an array. (RNS) Rejoice, some women now have the choice to refuse an abortion in all 50 states! On Tuesday, Maine Gov. Paul LePage signed a bill that will make abortion illegal after 15 weeks. A similar bill has passed the House, and now the fate of the legislation is in the Senate's hands. The bill would ban most abortions after 15 weeks of pregnancy, and the penalty e79caf774b

I am wondering if someone could provide some pointers on how to solve this problem. I have to test two hypotheses and I would like to know which of them is more likely. Hypothesis 1: The outcome of the study is normally distributed. Hypothesis 2: The outcome of the study is not normally distributed. From Fisher's exact test one can solve the above problem by calculating the relative risk and then use the relative risk to find out which of the hypotheses is more likely to be true. But how do I solve it if I want to calculate the significance level. I thought of either flipping a coin or playing a fair game or a sequence of fair games. However it seems that doing this by flipping a coin
