From Atlus: I wasn't really into RPGs when I was younger. At the time, I was playing football and basketball, and did not play video games. However, on a trip to America with my mother around a few years ago, I found a game called "Final Fantasy IV" in an arcade. At that point, I was already a fan of the Final Fantasy series, so even if I never actually played the game myself, I was able to appreciate it and it sparked my interest in RPGs. Then, on my eleventh birthday, the game that I wanted more than anything was released: "Final Fantasy VII." I've been interested in RPGs since then, and playing "Final Fantasy VII" gave me motivation to start playing other ones. Thanks to the tips of my friends who were also into RPGs, I started to broaden my horizons, and started my adventure of RPG-chasing. At the beginning, I was unsure about online RPGs, but it was thanks to the exchange with my friends that I was able to experience the reality of the game. As long as the other person was online, I could stay connected to them in the game. As I continued to play RPGs, I was always interested in creating new characters, and the opportunity to do that through "Final Fantasy V" and "X" created a very different experience from "Final Fantasy VII" that taught me a lot. This is where I was introduced to a completely new world by the fantasy RPG "Dragon Quest VIII" for the Game Boy Color. I had never been interested in fantasy-themed games before, but from that point on, I was able to experience and understand the concepts of fantasy games like "Final Fantasy." The fantasy RPG "Final Fantasy XIII" for the PlayStation 3 and "Dragon Quest IX" for the Nintendo DS add a new, unique aspect to "RPGs." That is a story of grand scale, where each step is connected to the people of the previous step and where the events of the story are controlled by the player. In particular, "Dragon Quest IX" is a game in which you can experience the joy of the bond between the characters in a very enjoyable way. When "Final Fantasy XIII" was released on PlayStation 3 and "Dragon Quest IX" bff6bb2d33

■ATTACK The game uses a system called "Belias' Art", which involves attacks occurring in an instant. It increases the responsiveness of the game, and provides the feeling of "sword slashing". The speed of attacks increases when you use weapons of increasing power. To use weapons of a higher class, you will need to expend an ability. The more allies you have, the higher the damage of your attack. If you get defeated, you will lose your allies, including the one to use the ability. However, you can reforge the fallen allies by finding their body at any points in the dungeons. The strength of the damage taken will increase when you fight stronger enemies. However, the resistance will increase when you use powerful abilities. You can also increase the resistance by using defensive items. What's new:

Activision has launched a new website which has trailers and a few screenshots of the game that was shown at this years Comic Con. Click to expand... AGGGHHH yes I was expecting something else Going to be interesting to see what type of game it is and how it is developed. Probably some type of RPG I think. Looking at the screenshots I wouldn't be surprised if it was in the Mass Effect or Fallout vein. The Fallen Empire trailer sure has a lot of K space attractions. XD Black Hole Pioneers and Maelstroms? Click to expand... Actually, I think it might be some type of space strategy, but it looks like it kind of is grounded, as well. Basically, you're building a fleet. Kind of a space yes and no kind of game. As of right now, they're only posting a few screens and a video, although they do say it's been in development for over 4 years now. Click to expand... Yes, I think it's going to be a Asura title (at least they did say it was an Asura license). Interesting enough because Asura titles have hit a mark lately and TR sounds like it has the potential to be very good. I'll be curious to see how they take of the story as some of their stuff is getting quite confusing. 1.820 11.712 12.885 3.033 0.839 1.730 21.723 11.688
