9 — ISLAND (Chapter 10 in Dutch) After the incident, Reina had felt quite uneasy, and neither nnor souda could deny that. This one was at least twice as powerful as the nuna who was used in the game, who wasn't much less capable than nandor and sauna too. Normally game developers had a predefined number of "boost points" in theory, but if mero didn't appear in the game in order to fight him, he'd never be done gaining on mero. When he announced that his 'past' would be destroyed, the mero who'd been using Reina's body didn't go near her anymore, and he didn't slow down either. Reina had been too engulfed by fear to think about strategy. Her most important thought at the time was for how to survive. Early in the morning she could do nothing but just walk around in an aimless manner, and even then she felt as if she had no plan for escaping. When souda finally returned later, calling Reina for lunch, Reina burst into tears. After that day, Reina didn't tell souda of what had happened, and souda never again questioned her about events around these days. The younger nuna didn't feel like it was alright to say she had no thoughts of strategy or tactics. She absolutely, positively didn't feel like saying that even at the risk of her nuna's life. She feared that in souda's heart, mero's declaration of past defeats be reference to her. She feared that nandor might come to similar understanding and take revenge on her nuna. "Nuno-sama." A phone ring showed in Reina's hand that she'd been handed by souda. "It's Azure." Reina gently pressed the answer button, and said in a tone slightly irritated towards him "Did something happen?" Meanwhile, Azure answered from a different part of the woods from the right behind the main entrance, "It's more or less okay, the opponent has already fallen to zero."
