Download and Enjoy TotalD TotalD Free DownloadThe Boston Celtics have the first pick in the 2013 NBA Draft. Many experts have the Celtics selecting Kentucky's star point guard John Wall. However, Celtics president Danny Ainge is well-known for taking risks, and according to a recent ESPN.com report, Ainge is looking to trade the number one pick to the Washington Wizards for the number 15 overall selection in the 2012 NBA Draft. Ainge is reportedly looking to trade the number one pick in the 2013 NBA Draft for Wizards all-star point guard John Wall. Celtics president Danny Ainge will then be tasked with trying to negotiate a sign-and-trade with the Wizards, which he has done before. At the start of this season, when the Wizards were rebuilding, it seemed like the Celtics had no chance at snagging Wall. However, after the Wizards made a playoff run to the Eastern Conference Finals, Wall is now on a team looking to compete. With Wall on the team, the Wizards have a 56.2 win pace, which is sixth best in the East. As for the Celtics, they have the 9th best 50.5 win pace. While Boston is only a few games under.500, they have only won one game against a team currently in the top ten in the East and have only won one game against a team currently in the top eight of the East. In fact, the Celtics have only won three games against teams currently in the top fourteen of the East. With the Celtics and Wizards both struggling, it seems like an ideal trade for both teams. Wall would be a great addition to a Celtics team that is clearly on the downswing. In addition, a Celtics team that can no longer compete in the East due to its lack of veteran talent would be greatly improved by acquiring a player like Wall, who is set to be one of the best point guards in the NBA. On the other side of the trade, Ainge would get a trade chip for a player he believes will help him build a team that can not only make the playoffs in 2013, but make a run in the future as well. This is a trade that makes sense on both sides of the trade, but will the Celtics do it? Ainge is
