Because all cells were modified with the fluorescent vital dye Calcein Violet (Molecular Probes), the distribution of viable, dead, and dying cells was tracked for ~24 hours post-PDT in suspension (based on incubation time for Calcein Violet staining). Calcein Violet-labeled cells that were alive, dying (by stain uptake), or dead, were found at all times during the experiment (Fig 6B{ref-type="fig"}). At 0.5 hours post-PDT, there was significant uptake of Calcein Violet by cells treated with 4 µg/mL, but no uptake by cells treated with 20 µg/mL (Fig 6B{ref-type="fig"}). This difference in uptake of fluorescent vital dye was also reflected in cell metabolism as revealed by luminescence 595f342e71
