Photoshop offers a "teaching" version called Photoshop Elements. It is available for free (or $30 annually) and includes many of the same features as the full version of Photoshop. Creating An Image You create an image in Photoshop the way you create an illustration or any other type of artwork. You create layers and place them over the image, either by dragging and dropping or by using the Layers panel. Why would you use layers? Because unlike traditional raster-based images, it's easy to move layers around or change their contents or to add to or subtract from the picture. Illustrations are created in layers just as other artwork is, and you use the same method of arranging the elements on a page, front to back, top to bottom. You can easily create and place them one at a time or print as a single page. You can then position those layers accurately in the final design. You can use Photoshop with any type of image (except background images or areas that stretch to the edge of the page). An image can be any number of bits (or pixels) and dimensions, but the image file itself must be either a bitmap or a vector image. Regardless of the type of file (bitmap or vector), you can convert it to a bitmap format using the Select tool as described in the following list. 1. Choose Image⇒Mode⇒RGB Color to open the image in RGB mode. 2. Choose Edit⇒Convert to a New Bitmap. You can convert a vector file to a bitmap image by opening the image and choosing Image⇒Canvas Size⇒UCS. Then drag the image to the canvas. When you convert an image to a bitmap, you don't have much control over its size. Also, when you convert an image to a bitmap, you reduce it to the size of its canvas, in pixels. As with all image tools in Photoshop, you have various ways of converting images from bitmap to vector (more on the different types of images in the next section) and from vector to bitmap. Working with Bitmap Images Bitmaps are images that display color in a simple collection of dots — pixels — rather than as a gradient or an image composed of layers. Bitmaps have several advantages: They're easy to work with because you can resize them and make

Hemodynamic support with extracorporeal membrane oxygenation improves invasive hemodynamic monitoring in acute respiratory failure. To prospectively evaluate the impact of extracorporeal membrane oxygenation (ECMO) on invasive hemodynamic monitoring in patients with acute respiratory failure. Since February 2010 to March 2012, 60 patients (age, 64 ± 14 years) with acute respiratory failure requiring venoarterial ECMO were prospectively enrolled in our study. Data of invasive hemodynamic monitoring, ECMO-related complications, and hospital mortality were collected. Patients were divided into two groups based on whether they received ECMO for over 36 hours. Baseline patient characteristics were comparable between the two groups except for a significantly higher respiratory rate and blood flow in group 1. The number of patients with gastric atelectasis, orotracheal intubation, and central venous pressure values in the range of 15 to 20 mm Hg were significantly lower in group 1 than in group 2 (group 1 vs. group 2, 4 [7%] vs. 42 [70%], $p = 0.00001$ and 2 [3%] vs. 36 [60%], $p = 0.00001$, respectively). The number of patients with cardiac output (CO) values in the range of 2.5 to 4.4 L/min/m were significantly higher in group 1 than in group 2 (group 1 vs. group 2, 41 [69%] vs. 29 [48%], $p = 0.0001$). No other significant differences in other parameters were found between the groups. ECMO improved invasive hemodynamic monitoring by improving the detection rate and CO range. 1. Technical Field The present invention is directed to a user interface for an interactive information retrieval system. More specifically, the invention is directed to a user interface for an interactive information retrieval system where accessing documents is configurable based on a set of user-selected criteria. 2. Description of the Related Art Information retrieval (IR) systems are well known for allowing a user to access and retrieve documents from a large database. Generally, users input a query that is processed by the IR system to return an ordered list of documents. However, IR systems do not handle many of the problems associated with navigation within a large document library, such as, for example, where a user inputs a query or narrows the search scope. U.S. Pat. No. 6,701,960, for example, teaches a method for searching a large document library using a query context

News Rowley, RPA Golden Pipeline Sheldrake highlights water-quality tests Rowley, RPA Golden Pipeline Sheldrake highlights water-quality tests Tampa Bay's water suppliers are asking the public to report any illegal discharges of stormwater and wastewater into Tampa Bay. The "Golden Pipeline" project of Tampa Bay Water, Gulf Coast Water, Tampa Electric Co. and the US Army Corps of Engineers is looking for illegal discharges of stormwater and wastewater. In January, the area's water suppliers launched an "in-line" notice system to help with water quality in Tampa Bay. They're asking the public to send them any information on illegal discharges. "The Golden Pipeline's mission is to protect our bay," said Tampa Bay Water spokesman Tom Brill. "The more information we have, the better we'll be able to assess any impacts to our area's water. Illegal discharges contaminate our bay in many ways, including discharging stormwater, treated wastewater and raw sewage that's untreated, exceeding the daily loadings allowed from our sewage treatment plants. We are committed to working with our stakeholders to find solutions so the bay can remain a clean and fishable resource for the future." On Jan. 23, the Golden Pipeline team was among several water suppliers from the southern region to attend a water quality conference in Tampa. They were met with residents from Osceola and Marion counties, who said they're concerned about the impact illegal discharges are having on their watersheds. Water quality along the West Coast is being impacted by large discharges from Washington and Oregon, which are causing water pollution and negative effects to wildlife. "One of the biggest concerns on the West Coast is that if you have an event that creates a lot of runoff, whether it's from a rain event or a runoff that comes from agricultural runoff, then you're creating a lot of contaminant loads," said Andy Isenberg, manager of the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission's Everglades and West Coast division. "You have a lot of rivers to back up, not only to the rivers but to Lake Okeechobee, which is where a lot of our bay water flows." Isenberg said the impacts come in the form of sediment, nutrients, fecal coliform and pathogens
