Her sensitive mother instincts are evident. Simply put, the Wozniak is tough. To survive, the girl must learn to be tough and remain the self-sufficient, detached, relentless "knock 'em dead" machine she has become. I was apprehensive about this material, but now that I've finished it I don't have any regrets. After its publication in 1976, she has remained as fierce-minded as she was in the pages of the book. It has inspired many young women to reject the absurd value systems of our culture and to reject the ways in which men have dominated women and still control women's lives today. They would be better off "waking up" than being "sleeping walking dead" zombies. Anyone with the capacity to think objectively and discern the difference between fantasy and reality must realize that many women today are in a state of gender-crisis and if they can't find ways to awaken from this slumber, they'll end up being even more like the zombies than those already are. They need to avoid becoming "collective zombies," they need to become "individual zombies" who have the incentive to be the true dominant, able, and independent beings they really are. Ironically, it is the men who are responsible for these mistakes, these problems, these "sleeping walking dead," "collective zombie" type situations. No matter what you do, it is always the men who play the dominant role in the relationships, as in families. They are the ones who tell the women what to do, how to dress, how to act, how to behave, how to think. How to behave makes women appear sexually available and it makes men feel like they are needed and, therefore, like "real men." The problem with this is, in the long run, it does nothing to develop and strengthen the self-confidence and self-reliance of those trapped in it. It is men who take the reins of the family home and make the decisions. It's their job to be in charge, to be "the man." A woman is not born a "man." She is

Time, money, and energy are central to writing, but my ability to write fiction began as a spectator sport.. As a theater-goer, I would make several theater visits a week, sometimes for several hours at a time. That allowed time for thinking. The theatrical experience, too, allows you to meditate, stare into space, and think your way through it. When the lights go down and the curtain rises, every light in the theater is turned on. It's a sea of lights that surrounds you. You're sitting in the middle of a space where you can look around, up, and down without seeing anyone. You feel there's no one there with you, yet you're connected to all of that vast space. When I began writing, I would write in the theater all the time. Having the theater for a writer's nest gave me a place to think and write. When a play opened, I'd rush right in and stay for the entire run. I'd spend eight hours a night watching 2010 Have you ever had that feeling of little things niggling at you?

One thing after another and things that are out of the ordinary creep in until you feel like you are a little crazy? This is me today. Blair has been a mess lately. Not the normal off and on, all over the place, no attention to detail, not listening to requests, not wanting to eat, not wanting to go out the door, napping for several hours, meandering all over the house from room to room, grabbing things left on the floor, hitting herself etc. It started one day when she was going through all of the toys in her room trying to figure out what she wanted to play with. She grabbed the throw blanket in her room which has been a good thing as it has kept her cooler while she naps and has been a blanket-blanket substitute. She picked up a butterfly which has been sitting on the edge of the throw
