The present study investigates the polymer scaffolds obtained by cross-linking of dextran-containing ligand (LB) with 4,6-dioxohexanoate (DOH) using several different cross-linking agents. The influence of the number of DOH molecules attached to LB on the polymer scaffold is discussed. A reduced number of DOH molecules is expected to lead to a more open, flexible polymer with a higher cross-linking density. The cross-linking density of the resulting polymer scaffolds is determined by NMR spectroscopy and linked to the elasticity of the scaffolds. The results show that the scaffold with the lowest cross-linking density is the most elastic. Moreover, a lower cross-linking density is accompanied by a lower residual solvent content, which indicates a more open polymer. Furthermore, the scaffold cross-linked with 10 DOH molecules had more chance to be degraded by intestinal hydrolases.Sunday's game between the San Diego Padres and Los Angeles Dodgers marks the final matchup of the 2013 season for the 18-year-old phenom, who will turn 19 in May. Simmons is a shortstop, more comfortable at the hot corner than at the plate, but scouts say he's doing well enough for a corner infield position. He's also a good athlete who's shown the ability to pick it, get good jumps and range. Simmons is a light-hitting prospect who might fill the gap in a big-league roster until the majors become ready to accept his talents. "He has a chance to be really good," says the pitcher in question, Rich Hill. Hill is a 23-year-old who spent last season in the Padres' bullpen, amassing a 4.37 ERA with an impressive .222 opponents' batting average. He 3a67dffeec
