The present study was conducted to assess the role of human milk on the in vitro immunologic functions of human peripheral blood lymphocytes (PBL). PBL from breastfed and nonbreastfed mothers were cultured in medium containing phytohemagglutinin (PHA) to examine the proliferative response and in the absence of PHA to determine the cytotoxic activity. The IFNgamma, TNFalpha, and IL-1alpha concentrations in cell culture supernatants were measured by ELISA. The results indicated that nonbreastfed PBL had a lower proliferative response, lower cytotoxic activity, and lower production of cytokines than breastfed PBL. We conclude that human milk not only modulates the proliferative responses of PBL in response to PHA, but also enhances their cytotoxic activity and the cytokine production of IL-1alpha and IFNgamma. 3 + 5 + ( - 4 - ( ( - 1 Occ13bf012
