Field of the Invention This invention relates generally to a trampoline which is suspended from an overhead support, and more particularly to such a trampoline which is assembled from a plurality of parts which may be assembled with a minimum of tools and equipment. 2. Description of the Prior Art Trampolines of various designs and constructions are old and well known. Indeed the basic design of trampolines was probably developed by various early scientists who made a periodic jump from horseback. One of the basic principles on which a trampoline operates is the bounce of a series of cords, cables, wires, d0c515b9f4
