Factors related to the use of radiographic services. Each year, approximately 76 million radiologic examinations are performed in the U.S. by radiologists, radiologists assistants, and technologists; on average, each physician performs about four diagnostic radiologic examinations annually. A descriptive analysis of the use of the U.S. radiography services is provided, with a focus on U.S. radiologists, to characterize who and what makes the most use of the radiography services. A combination of survey and analysis of national data sources is used to characterize the use of the radiography services by population subgroups within the total U.S. population. Data sources include the 1990 National Hospital Ambulatory Medical Care Survey, the 1990 National Health Interview Survey, the 1994-1996 National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey, and the 1994 National Radiological Services Survey. About one third of the diagnostic radiologic procedures performed in the U.S. are performed by radiologists, and about half of all radiologists use X-ray equipment. Radiologists who provide these services are more likely to use X-ray equipment, work in hospitals or medical centers, and be more dependent on Medicare than radiologists who do not use X-ray equipment. The most commonly reported use of radiography services was for diagnostic evaluation. This data can be used in both public health and clinical practice to guide decision making.Q: Localization of real time prices for measurements on the Olympic torch? I have tried asking the program's producer in Japan, but he didn't know. A: I have found an answer to my question.
