FREEÀ. Development of an immunotoxicity assay in rats: effects of 2,3,7,8-tetrachlorodibenzo-p-dioxin on the functions of splenic and macrophage-derived cells. We investigated the effects of 2,3,7,8-tetrachlorodibenzo-p-dioxin (TCDD) on the functions of splenic and macrophage-derived cells in rats. When rats were exposed to 2 micrograms TCDD/kg of body weight/d for 4 wk, both the number of granulocyte/monocyte (Gr-M) progenitor cells in the bone marrow and the total number of granulocytes in the peripheral blood decreased compared with the controls. In addition, the proliferation of spleen cells from TCDD-treated rats was markedly depressed. We established an assay system for detecting TCDD-induced immunotoxicity in vitro using the proliferation of splenic cells, which was dependent on cell-cell contact. With the proliferation assay, TCDD inhibited the proliferation of splenic cells in a dose-dependent manner. The proliferation of splenic cells in response to the mitogenic lectins concanavalin A and phytohemagglutinin was also inhibited by TCDD. Further, in contrast to effects on Gr-M cells, the proliferative response to macrophage colony-stimulating factor was suppressed by TCDD. Thus, the results of the present study indicate that the proliferative response of splenic cells is more sensitive than that of Gr-M cells to TCDD-induced immunotoxicity. The present results also suggest that the cause of the inhibition of splenic cell proliferation by TCDD is not the apoptotic process.Kanda-no-Kobira is the ceremonial centre of the town of Kobira in the Miyagi prefecture of Japan.
