Sex robots are becoming increasingly common. We're seeing them on internet shopping sites, legal brothels and even at dealerships. Nasty women in latex are already going unchallenged at bars and nightclubs and are being peddled to men on the dark web. But now, sex robots could be coming for your home. One such company has launched a Kickstarter crowdfunding campaign for its first-generation robot, which it says is more lifelike than its predecessors. It's fully interactive and can be programmed with a range of behaviours to suit whatever desires you have. "It's no longer just 'Frankenstein's Monster' who is a weapon against us and no longer just a horror for us to think about," explained founder Lola Bunny. "It's us." While she's right, this robot is not just your average sex doll. The creators have designed it to make men feel sexy. In doing so, the company wants to dispel the idea that sex dolls are just "dolloed up Barbie-type things." "It's kinda been like the women going, 'You know, you've got to wonder why a woman would buy an attractive machine that gives you no intellectual or emotional connection,'" she said. To address that, Lola Bunny's sex bot uses a "deep learning" algorithm to guess the user's sexual preferences and combine that with audio and video to create a "personable" relationship. I first became acquainted with Lola Bunny and her companions in a video called Hot Coffee Girls where I watched them perform a variety of sexual acts. At that time, I had no idea what they were: the sinister or the seductive. But now, I'm going to break the ice. (The first sex robot I ever saw was the Dalek, and I didn't like it. It was basically a human exterminator that was at the beck and call of its male masters.) In its Kickstarter campaign, Lola Bunny promised that all future models would be less androgynous and offer more variety to her male customers. Its creators are passionate about robots, and say it's not surprising that they're so popular. They were inspired by the short-lived 1980s TV show Cybersix, which was about scientists and their competing robots. "As a kid I remember watching that and thinking, 'Ah, so I should do that,'" Lola
