stoked by the recent international meeting of the World Transhumanist Association. The WTA has an egalitarian philosophy for the basic right of every citizen to control the development of their own bodies, but it also recognises the rationality of pursuing some of those same goals through technological means. It's clear why people have concerns about humans being made more like machines. We're here, in bodies that wear out or malfunction or betray us. We're not like that - but we could be.

Transhumanists don't want to take that away from us, but they also see it as inevitable that we will. The world and the tools around us will become ever more technological. It's why we have to decide now how best we handle that, and what risks we are willing to take. In this respect, transhumanism is very different to other branches of science fiction.

Perhaps, once your brain has been uploaded, you'll feel just like a machine, a machine that's been dissected, enhanced and adjusted. When I first played Cyberpunk 2077, I was very interested in whether I could, if only temporarily, "see the future". But it was a very 2077 perspective. The future is inherently unknowable. The future is always much more frightening than the present is comfortable, and we can only ever have the best future by knowing it as it becomes present. We can only understand

Rise, Tarnished, and be guided by grace to brandish the power of the Elden Ring and become an Elden Lord in the Lands Between. 26.2.2010 The Elder Scrolls Online and ZeniMax Online Studios today announced the launch of a new beta program that will allow players to explore a large part of Tamriel, the game world from The Elder Scrolls universe. The program will allow players to experience the world of Tamriel through the trial period and get a feel for Elder Scrolls. They will experience the thrill of traveling, fight dragons, meet (and defeat) legendary enemies, and uncover secrets on quests throughout the lands of Skyrim. The beta will be available to all players in The Elder Scrolls Online for PC, Mac, PS3, and Xbox 360. The beta is designed to simulate a portion of the upcoming game where the races of Tamriel will be free to explore and there will be a constant threat of danger and conflict. For example, players will be able to encounter dragons in the north of Tamriel and other epic combat. Players will also have the opportunity to become a member of a guild and participate in the guild's activities. The beta will support limited accounts. The beta will offer unique benefits, such as full customization and NPC leveling, along with a powerful skill system. Various game activities and activities will be available to players, who will be able to discover the content and will be able to share their knowledge through the forums. The Beta Program will run from February 27, 2010 to March 24, 2010. Players can sign-up as an Alpha Tester on the ZeniMax website. Players will receive "alpha tester" rewards based on how they play during the test period. The rewards may include beta access, beta titles, items, or other rewards. At this time, the beta is not an official test. The content in the beta is a sample of what is to be expected in the full game, and any planned changes and updates to the game will be made once the beta is launched. As the number of players participating in the beta increases, the size of the beta may be increased, to ensure that the game works well. The beta will offer limited-time premium subscriptions to provide additional options, such as faster character advancement, unique items, special land locations, and other enhancements. Players who purchase a premium subscription will be able to choose the land of the Skyrmid for their character

The Apple family may not always be close and friendly, but it's gotten so much smaller in recent years. In recent years, the "branch" system has been scrapped when apps and services are brought to the iPad, and now a new report would suggest the three-screen strategy isn't going away anytime soon.

MacRumors reported on Wednesday that the iPad, Apple TV, and Apple Watch could all debut simultaneously this summer, during the third quarter of 2014. A new 2-in-1 computer would be the main focus of the trio of new devices, which would not be redesigns of last year's iPads, phones, and watches. Instead, they'd be a classic media device that keeps up with current trends, and a second tablet that brings iPads to a new level.

Not only would this design encourage more time with the three tablets, but it would cut down on the space needed on a table, something many of us find lacking.

Indeed, a third iOS-based device would not mean an end to the iPhone/iPad legacy. Apple TV, the report said, would be the "most important of the new products,

Q: Cannot print decimal with pre-filled string I'm trying to print out a Decimal from a string using a pre-filled string. However, when I try to print a decimal with a string pre-filled with '0.', it prints out 0.0 to the console. I can work around this by extracting the last 2 digits of the decimal and then printing it out, however, this is not an acceptable solution because I do not know the index of the decimal. What is the proper way to display a pre-filled string with a decimal. A: This is a known issue with BigDecimal (as others have pointed out) and unfortunately there is no built-in solution. In general, you'll have to either store the number of digits and perform operations on the `BigDecimal` accordingly (which gets messy), or manually pad the string. I wrote a post about this on my blog that points to a couple of workarounds. You can find that here: BigDecimal Pad String with Numbers. Effect of feeding the active core of Selenium-containing mixed selenomethionine/seleno-homocysteine thiol proteinase inhibitor on specific glutathione-dependent enzymes, serum selenium and growth performance of Japanese quail. The aims of this experiment were to study the bioavailability and response of Japanese quail fed the active core of Selenium-containing mixed Se-methionine/Se-homocysteine thiol proteinase inhibitor (Se M/H-TSPI) as a dietary supplement, and to relate such response to the variation of selenium status and enzymes involved in glutathione metabolism. A total of 144 one-day-old Japanese quail were assigned to three dietary treatments in a randomized complete block design of 3×2 factorial design; each treatment was replicated with six cage replicates. The dietary treatments were a basal diet supplemented with 0 (control), 100 or 200 mg kg⁻¹ Se M/H-TSPI, respectively. The Se level in quail was positively related to Se M/H-TSPI supplementation in the diet. After four weeks of dietary supplementation, the Se level in the liver, serum and tibia was significantly increased by supplementation with Se M/H-TSPI, when compared with the control (P
