Q: What is the difference between thinking and thinking of thinking? I have heard this saying before, but don't really know what the difference is between thinking and thinking of thinking. I already asked this question in a slightly different way, but I just want to try and get a more concrete answer, as not all of us are particularly quick at some things. What is the difference between thinking and thinking of thinking? A: It means if you're trying to do something, to not lose time thinking about what you're going to do. e.g. I'm going to walk to work. I'll do that if I don't think about it. If I think about it, then I'll end up wasting time. A: To think of means to think in order to realize that you are thinking, and think of thinking means to think about that. But these are just regular English idiom. Adherence as a concept in health psychology. Adherence to treatment is a concept that has received much research and critical attention in the field of health psychology over the last few years. The concept's origins are traced back to the work of Shneidman (1970), who introduced the concept in an attempt to explain the puzzling phenomenon that people who have reported themselves as adherent to treatment have a poor outcome. In addition, studies have shown that one's adherence to treatment can have a direct effect on one's recovery. Although adherence is now recognized as an important concept for health psychologists, it still lacks a coherent theoretical framework. The aim of this paper is to explore how adherence to treatment can be conceptualized and further to use this theoretical framework to explain a series of empirical findings. This research project used the concept of adherence in order to examine the following phenomenon: 1) their personal experiences of taking up exercise after an illness, 2) the determinants and importance of the exercise programme received and 3) why a number of people are not able to carry out the programme given. This paper intends to highlight the importance of adherence to treatment in order to motivate health psychologists to continue the research in this area.One of the oldest, most respected and largest tour operators in the world. Q: Linking to the Chrome OS Stable Channel Downloads page using HTML, CSS, and JavaScript? On the Google Product forums, if I'm reading correctly, the latest stable version of Chrome for Google Chromebooks is available as of this post. But I'm not seeing anything on Chrome.com to download that version. I don't understand why Chrome's Downloads page isn't updated to point to the latest stable build. If this is something that should be updated by an HTML, CSS, and JavaScript function, how would I go about doing this? A: The following URL is supposed to redirect to the download page: chrome://downloads It doesn't redirect for me, but it does cause the download page to load fine: I suspect that the servers which serve Chrome's downloads are updating their redirects, but I've noticed several things during this time: Google usually only updates the , the , and the ; I suspect these redirects are in the code somewhere, and Google is just updating them now. Website load times are bad. I suspect that page contents may be cached on the user's browser, causing it to wait until the cache has been updated before it loads. More information would be nice about why this is happening in Google's download pages. So often, we can't hear what we really want to hear. Trump supporters are often so wrapped up in the narcissism of billionaire boys' clubs like Trump's, they can't see how their man-child-in-chief is destroying America. They've had enough of politicians who see them as pawns to get elected, and puppets to keep their position at the head of the line. They can't see the American Dream and the sacrifices of history being erased. They can't see that their lives and liberty are in danger. Their feelings of isolation and cultural shame are being ripped off the screen of their computers. So we go on. We keep voting for politicians who don't care about you, because we don't care about you either. We show up for the politicians who will stop the rape and pillage
