Although the metacarpus is an important skeletal element contributing to functionality, it is also affected by changes associated with growth and an age-related decline in mobility. This study examined the degree to which metacarpal bone morphology and size was affected by age in foxhounds. Metacarpal bones from the fore and hind limbs of 12 foxhounds were scanned using micro-CT. An index of height-width ratio and angular measurements were calculated to assess bone shape and size. Age was negatively correlated with height-width ratio (PThe long-term objective of our research is to understand the molecular regulation of neural development by neurotrophins and other factors. We are interested in the transcription factor ETS1.

In the embryonic forebrain, ETS1 is transiently expressed during the late embryonic phase, and was shown to regulate neural differentiation. We will compare the neural-specific expression pattern of ETS1, by in situ hybridization, with its regulation in vivo. We have cloned a cDNA encoding the embryonic form of ETS1 from E14.5 mouse embryo.

Characterization of the amino acid sequence shows that it is 99% identical to the corresponding sequence in the human being. ETS1 protein expression was detected by Western blot analysis. The strongest signal was detected in E14.5 embryo. ETS
