“The guys from the team at 11bit Studios helped us out so much with this and we are extremely grateful for that. I really think there is a lot of stuff that we can do in the future with FIFA players that will make the game play more realistic,” added Christoph Hartmann, Director of FIFA. “FIFA has always been a favourite game for FIFA 20, and the Ultimate Team mode saw the biggest improvements since the release of FIFA 19,” said Aaron Wulven, Creative Director at 11bit Studios. “With HyperMotion Technology, we get a new toolset to explore the physics we already have in the game and make further improvements in the future.” You can watch the FIFA 20: ‘Your Journey’ trailer here and the FIFA 20: ‘FIFA Story’ trailer here. Q: ASP.NET MVC accessing action parameters in a Controller action

I’m working on an ASP.NET MVC2 app that has a Controller that needs to access some of the parameters passed to its actions. For instance, in the following code fragment, I would like to access "foo" passed to the action from the query string. [HttpGet] public ActionResult Foo(string foo) { // Do something with the string foo. }

I know this isn't possible because the query string is captured by the route data. Any thoughts?

A: I was trying to access parameters passed by query string and I came across a similar problem. I was having trouble figuring out a clean way to do this. This question helped me figure out a way to get my result: Using ASP.NET MVC3, how to get query string parameters from a controller action?

A: (In MVC3) You can get the key value pairs from the query string in the action method like this: var values = HttpUtility.ParseQueryString(Request.RawQuery); This will give you an object where the keys are the names of the parameters, and the values are the values of the parameters. If the query string has multiple parameters with the same name (just like the one you posted), the values object will only have one element in the array. This way, you don't have to specify the Notes: - There is a new online rating system in place called “Exclusive Rating” which is separate from the overall FIFA club rating. “Exclusive Rating” is designed to reward players who are playing the game in a way that accurately reflects how every single player from their club performs in real life. This new system is not negatively impacting the overall FIFA club rating. The updated FIFA Club rating is still based on all matches played, and players who are in the top tiers of play for their clubs will still receive higher club ratings than players who aren’t in such great form. The new system is rewarding players who excel in their roles as both a club and player, and will help to create a more authentic and dynamic experience in FIFA. For more details on this new rating system, please visit: www.fifa.com/social-responsibility/exclusive-rating. - We have deployed an update that delivers the following improvements and fixes: - Optimized game performance for select iOS devices and reduced the amount of time between gameplay events, such as in-game tooltips, to provide a more fluid experience. - Fixed an issue where some players would not be able to be created in Ultimate Team mode. - Fixed an issue in the new live online voting system where voting would not persist. - Player preparation workbook (PW) that was created
