In the first three formats, the file name was left alone except for a short (nine character) title. As per the APKMager sdk, i have set android:noBackup attribute on application tag to prevent backup of.apk. But can't find any folder to backup the files which is being created by the sdk. I have set below permission on files in order to be able to obtain fingerprint profile of my application: java.io.FilePermission "C:\Users\Prem Patil\Desktop\vwServerDemo\app\build\outputs\apk\Android-release\app-release.apk", "write*", "true"; FileOutputStream writeStream = new FileOutputStream(new File(context.getFilesDir().getPath() + File.separator + "" + "vwserverdemo" + File.separator + "" + "app" + File.separator + "" + "build" + File.separator + "" + "outputs" + File.separator + "" + "apk" + File.separator + "" + "Android-release" + File.separator + "" + "app-release.apk")); writeStream.write(getApplicationBuffer().getBytes()); writeStream.close(); A: I found that the files written during build process by the APKMager can be obtained by executing the command adb pull /data/local/tmp. adb pull /data/local/tmp This will print the contents which is being written by the build process. Q: How to handle a pulling request after completing a work in progress (WIP) I was given a task (and then following a work in progress story board) to release a product to our QA. We are about 80% done with our final product. I'm now ready to approve the release from QA and merge it to master. However, I realize we have a work in progress story (not a required one, but I will inevitably do) between version 1.0 and version 1.1. So is there a better workflow for handling this kind of scenario. In other words, how should I handle this pull request? Can I approve the release from 6d1f23a050
