Treatment of superficial bladder tumours with intravesical instillations of chemotherapy can significantly influence systemic treatment. Systemic reactions related to chemotherapy are mainly the result of leakage of cytotoxic agents into the systemic circulation through urine (cystitis) or by the embolisation of chemotherapeutic agents into small vessels of the bladder wall (vasculitis). In general, local instillation of chemotherapeutic agents is associated with a low incidence of clinical systemic complications. The most frequent complications (approximately 10% of all bladder cancer patients treated with intravesical therapy) are neutropenic fever, thrombosis and haematuria. Patients with local 6d1f23a050
