I know where I was at when I started. But I grew up. Ive even been to music shops (Ive been all over) and Ive been to studios that people actually still live in and work out of. Id NEVER be able to live full time in a studio like that. Id be dying because of the damned noise all the time. So, yeah. In my case and in a lot of peoples case, they buy all the plugins legally. As software-creators. As legitimate artists and companies. Because they want to actually make a living with their careers and output. As opposed to the ones who are involved in Audio-engineering because theyre into it, but dont want to actually earn money from it. As a hobby. I'm not saying that you should steal software, but I am saying that you don't have to feel guilty about it. I don't have a guilt complex, and I'm sure I am not the only one. If you were to take the time to listen to those famous artists who made thousands of dollars, usually on illegal licenses, then you might learn that the motive behind it was to get the world to know their music better and become famous. We have thousands of artists who are paying the price with jail time and fines for using cracks, and we have thousands of artists who get the same life sentence instead for doing the same thing. That's the problem. I know that many of you have a love for that certain thing you can do and can't do. Its exhilarating. That's why I wrote this article. I am NOT saying that people who use cracked software are selfish or bad people. I am saying that if you are that person, I will miss that person. I don't want to bring that person down. I just want you to know that you are not always going to be a bad person. There is a proper way to be successful. Its just easier said than done. The world is nothing without the people who are willing to put in more than the people who are willing to put in less. That's all.
