there are different types of sweepstakes, and you should consider all of these before launching a promotion. these include true sweepstakes, random drawings, lottery sweepstakes and online lotteries. for true sweepstakes, your chances of winning depend on you playing the game; for random drawings and lotteries, you cannot play but you can get a financial benefit as a result of playing; and for lottery sweepstakes, you play against the house or operator. although most people don't like the idea of winners getting a "kickback," most people accept this as the normal price of doing business. however, the federal trade commission considers such "payments" to be a form of bribery, although states have started to legalize them. if you are contacted, you may opt out of the sweepstakes at any time by replying to the email or responding to the message on social media. participation in the sweepstakes constitutes entrant's consent to be contacted by bolt and their authorized representatives regarding the oneclick! collector's edition and oneclick! installer 3 download after the sweepstakes has ended. except where indicated otherwise, materials are subject to copyright and trademark. use of the contest title, prize names, and images and descriptions is prohibited by the trademark and copyright law. the contest title or name is registered and unregistered trademark owned by bolt, inc. this is bad news for any business as it means you'll have to either pay one of the many softwares out there to moderate it or spend your time manually reviewing it (unless you want to spend a few hours a week on this). and if you are not on the ball you could even miss out on a good publicity opportunity by letting this happen and may not even get paid out. 5ec8ef588b
