one of the main themes of this exhibition is the transience. the daughter of a dutch who is also called "van royen", after his first wife, was born a dutchman, but grew up in the usa with her american mother. in the earlier works of van royen from the 1980s, the figure is visible only as a silhouette, which seems to be a connection to this theme. print on photo paper, finished with 3 mm acrylic and glued on 3 mm dibond. at the rear with a sturdy suspension system, so that the picture can be hung instantly 'floating'. paper and image size 60 x 80 cm. signed and numbered 1/3 on front (note: on the first picture in this lot is missing the signature; this is the original image, without acrylic layer.) in this book the author goes deeper into the question of the way in which visual art is used in the making of books. in the course of the book different artistic strategies and techniques are presented. these range from the classical western book structure and decor design, to printed images, hand drawing and digitalisation. the topic of this book is in particular the conception and construction of the book, how it is created and what possibilities are offered by the various techniques and processes. the author is also developing his own process of book creation, with the aim of making the book a truly handmade object, and not just printed on paper. the book contains a lot of practical hints on how to develop these skills, like for example drawing in the margins of the print, how to cut paper with a knife, how to make a template for folding paper, where to look for inspiration, how to find the right brushes, pencils, colored pencils, and other tools and materials. the book is illustrated with a lot of works and also includes practical diagrams and step-by-step instructions.

when i got home, i took out all the things i had prepared with my sex book. i had practised in bed. and i said: no, i cant do this. and i started crying. i cried for three hours, because i didnt know what to do. and i decided to do it in the bath. and i stood in the bath and i did it. and i almost passed out. and i saw myself in the mirror and i said: oh my god, you look like a prostitute. (laughs) and i just fell on the floor. and i tried to get up and i wasnt able to. and then i looked at myself in the mirror again, and i said: you look like a murderer. i was acting all this time. i had a very low self-esteem. and i think i only got a better sense of worth because of prostitution. because i thought: i have no problem being here. i have no problem doing this. and i just started doing it. and i was comfortable with myself. and because of that, i became very comfortable with others. i could really like people. and at the end of my sex class, they told me: you will now have to practise with men, because now you have to be able to do that. and i was like: okay, that sounds good. this is one of the self-portraits, for example, you see a childhood friend. the case is signed with her name, but the boy is also renamed because of the family. the portrait of the dutch writer with four figures shows a group of three women and a man. this man has his back to the viewer and is carrying a package. this is the background, painted in oil on board. print on photo paper, finished with 3 mm acrylic and glued on 3 mm dibond. at the rear with a sturdy suspension system, so that the picture can be hung instantly 'floating'. paper and image size 60 x 80 cm. signed and numbered 1/3 on front (note: on the first picture in this lot is missing the signature; this is the original image, without acrylic layer.) 5ec8ef588b
