so yeah, a small little feature but in my opinion huge because it shows citrix listens to its customers. you want something and have a good use case for it, theyll make it happen. im sure many people will take advantage of this. just one more reason to keep your xenapp/xendesktop deployments up to date! a: existing xenapp enterprise and platinum edition customers must apply the hotfixes made available on march 15, 2009 from the xenapp 5 feature pack page on my account on citrix.com. for xenapp advanced edition customers, citrix recommends referencing the document entitled using application streaming with the advanced edition found on the xenapp 5 feature pack download page for instructions. in xenapp 6.5 you had the ability to publish content such as a website url or file like a word doc, pdf, etc. so it would appear right next to your application icons in web interface/storefront. a common use case for example was putting instructions for an application right next to the app. when you clicked on the app it would pass the url to the clients native browser and open right up lickity split, no waiting for it to launch like a regular app or desktop would. this was a wonderful feature on tablets like ipads especially because now you had a really nice touch based user experience on these docs and websites with the integration between receiver and the native os. a few months ago i had the opportunity to attend citrix synergy in san jose and had the honor to be present in a small group discussion with the guys from citrix xenapp and xendesktop product teams. in that session we discussed the current features and future improvements for both xenapp and xendesktop. during that time we had the chance to download the ctp build and we were impressed with a few things. 5ec8ef588b
