Search Widget Engine User Rating: 4.4 / 5 (9) TODAY: December 12th 2010 London-based Ninebot is one of the leading makers of the electric wheelchairs used by the disabled to get around. We recently spoke with John Daunt, CEO of Ninebot, to find out more about the company. And how will it help you to improve your quality of life? Like many companies, we are very keen to be an environmentally friendly company and we are also keen to promote alternative modes of transport for people who are not able to use the traditional means of transport. Our version of an electric wheelchair is called a Ninebot, which is because of its three wheels. And it can be controlled by joystick. It can be charged from an ordinary household socket. It is one of the first electric wheelchairs to be trialled with electric cars. There was a study done in London where a childless couple who both had limited mobility took their first Ninebot out for a trial. They took it for a trial to work out how they could actually use it in their daily life and in the public. That's how we started. The trial was done in Trafalgar Square and they found that they got on really well with the Ninebot. In fact they found it very easy to use and also very cheap to own. It has been shown to be good for people's quality of life as well. It is thought that one in six people with a disability has a problem with mobility. The wheelchairs that have been available in the past have not necessarily been designed for this. So we are working on a new generation of wheelchairs to allow people to live more independently. I don't know what percentage of people have reduced mobility, but the numbers are growing. And they're growing in part because people who are in the middle-
