The present invention relates to an apparatus for feeding out of a transport chamber a two-component flowing material. The flowing material has two components with different flow speeds, and it is contained in the transport chamber by means of suction transport means. The flowing material is fed into the transport chamber and out of it, whereby the flowing material is moved within the transport chamber. Such an apparatus is known, for example, from the publication "Amelangetzen" [Application] (A.G.M. B.V., publ. 1987, pages 97 to 106). In the known apparatus the flowing material, for example chocolate, is moved by means of a conveyor belt into the transport chamber. The material to be transported, such as liquid chocolate, is supplied to the conveyor belt and is pressed off the conveyor belt in the transport chamber. The flow speed of the flowing material decreases and the flowing material is pressed on the conveyor belt
