To start, let's be clear about what the web version of Photoshop is good for. You'll be able to achieve three main things. One: Edit and work on your image files on the web. Two: create a web page with images and maybe text, and release it to a wide audience. Three: and most importantly, make the web an extension of your desktop software. With that in mind, let's move on to the other side of the equation — the web version of Photoshop is aimed for the production pipeline instead of a long-form editing process which takes a couple of days to create and then a couple more to refine. When working within Photoshop, you'll find that: Shapes layer is really an amazing tool which is used to add different visual effects to images and other shapes. More than ever, it's important to maintain the greatest level of quality in your daily work. It's a smart move to hire a company like Adagen which is specialized in providing great quality at a reduced cost. The team has a great knowledge of the industry and more importantly, provides great training to all your employees. The effect I want to share with you today is a combination of the backdrop removal and the text overlay plugin. Let me share to you how I utilized both plugins and how I placed them to combine a unique look for the final image. #1 -1. Before doing anything with the backdrop removal or text layer I created a rectangular mask. This is where I started with the text. Since I'm using the text effect with a pattern I made it easier to remove the background by giving the text layer the mask I made before. It will matter more for the text layer it's made from the same font than the size of the pixels. So, I finally got how big I want the text to be. #2 -2. Then, I deleted the white space for the text. This time I want there to be a specific background so I used the backdrop removal, but instead of leaving the white background I chose to leave the faded skin, which will make the text more believable. #3 -3. Then I added a pattern layer. To do so, I made a rectangular gradient mask. This way I can control the pattern right on the layer. In this case, I went with the pink gradient. Then I placed the rectangle and moved it up by a couple of pixels. That way the pattern goes from the bottom of the image, covers the background up to the text layer. #4 -4. I moved the text to the top layer, making sure to hit copy. Then I went back to the top layer and duplicated the layer and pasted it down. This way I get a background as well as text. I used software for the black and white effect. #5 -5. With this layer in place, I started working with the text effect. For the text option I chose the combination of the font, and the type of effect I want for the text. I went with the cross-stitch effect. #6 -6. And finally, I placed the text. It's important to wait a bit for the text layer. The final result will look better when everything is still in the place and the background is still opaque, in case you've applied the gradient. Well, that's the end of this step. Step #7 -7. Almost the same process, I duplicated the text layer once, placed it under the first one and it's good to go. #8 -8. With the text having a background, it's time to add some effects to it. The first one is a solid color. Using the color picker I picked the pink color. #9 -9. I placed it over the top of the text, making sure to use the fluid mask to merge it. In this case, I used the ellipse to make it more narrow to get a more direct effect. #10 -10. After that, I added the gradient overlay with a darker color (the background color). Again, using a fluid mask to blend it in the text layer. #11 -11. Finally, I used the cross-stitch effect again. This time I blurred it after it's been overlapped with the gradient overlay. 933d7f57e6

The news is very dynamic in how they can update the news. In this illustration, you can see that everything is done except that the reporter added a clipping mask (where the mask turned into black) to the newspaper clip to focus on the editor-chosen mask and non-masked portion of the newspaper. The reporters' editor also provided a layer mask for a better look for the news. This is how they are altering the shirt and adding the new hole to give a new look.
