Most mRNAs from Escherichia coli contain two or more open reading frames (ORFs) located upstream of their protein coding regions. Previously, it was shown that one of these ORFs is translated in vivo in a specific mRNA (Møller, M., Zielenkiewicz, H., and Fussenegger, M. (1992) J. Biol. Chem. 267, 16489-16495). Using synthetic mRNAs in which the upstream ORF had been deleted, we now demonstrate that the upstream ORF is also translated in vivo on the same mRNA. Translation of the upstream ORF is not affected by the position of the ribosome binding site of the upstream ORF and occurs co-transcriptionally, since both mRNAs are transcribed simultaneously. Interestingly, this co-transcription also occurs when the mRNAs are derived from different genes and even from different operons. The co-transcription of the upstream ORF with its cognate mRNA is dependent on the region of the mRNA that is transcribed. The co-transcription depends on an intact -35 sequence and a region with a high proportion of uridines.India may have to spend 1,000 crore ru f988f36e3a
