Dynamic Therapy is a unique opportunity for therapists to gain a thorough understanding of the in's and out's of various dysfunctions from the perspective of their own body's innate wisdom. By taking time to observe from our own unique vantage point, we gain a way to look and see the body differently. What we can learn from that observation alone is broad ranging and when applied to our patients we are better able to facilitate their own healing from within. With Dynamic Therapy, the opportunity to see the body as an individual as well as the potential of enhancing our own perception of health and well-being can be extraordinary. We achieve this through a unique set of protocols that are designed to allow the body to truly heal itself. We are all unique and it is our greatest strength as well as our most common mistake that we try to isolate ourselves and make everything happen for us. Sometimes, rather than investing ourselves in other people, it is so easy to fall into a way of thinking that leaves us lonely. When we do, we lose the deepest connection we have to our own physical being. In contrast, when we truly live in connection with each other in the best of times, there is no separating ourselves at all. So in the practice of Dynamic Therapy, what is actually happening is that we are bringing healing, love and compassion back to the body. It is becoming whole and healing itself of its wayward limitations. With Dynamic Therapy, we see the body and our relationship to it in a completely new light. We enter the body with openness, paying close attention to how we feel, how much energy we have, and how we move. We can begin to engage in a relationship with the body which nurtures it to becoming aware. By bringing awareness to each of our systems, we begin to become aware of our own innate wisdom. Recognizing that it takes all systems working together, we can then begin to consider how
