In addition to reviews, the app also includes a rating system that awards 5-star reviews, with one star taken off that if it has a score of 1, 4 or 5. The ratings don't carry over from past releases. Finally, the Adjust Color radio button adds white to an image, adds black to tones, and removes all colors, making black and white the predominant color in the image. The other color choices are defaults. And, finally Outer Glow is a new effect that lets you superimpose an image onto another one. The Apply button lets you customize the four settings for the effect: left to right alignment, size, opacity, and how transparent you want it to be. I like the default settings, which create an image that skims the edges of its overlay. After introducing the new tools, here's an image that took about a minute to create using the new tools. I removed the highlighted comments above, and my feedback was that the white space is too boring while the pipes and the sign are distracting. One great example of how Adobe Sensei can help improve workflow every day is in the area of asset management. Manually tagging assets such as logo and icon files in Photoshop has always been a chore, and it's even worse if you have to tag them in multiple places because you need to keep using Photoshop. With classic Photoshop, your work-in-progress relied on your memory for asset data—a great tool if you need to tag it, but a disaster if you forget. Assets don't sit well in the background.

Where to find it: The Select tool and the Content-Aware tool, also known as Content-aware Scaling, are available in the tool panel. If the Content-Aware tool is checked, then the tool is selected (pink). If Content-Aware is unchecked, it's selected (white). How to use it: You use the Pencil tool to draw over the part of the image you want to affect. You could draw several shapes – one solid color, one with a gradient, one with a pattern, etc. You can then fill or paint over these areas with your favorite color, or leave them transparent. You can also fill or paint over just the individual colors by going to the Channels panel and selecting the colors you want to affect. In order to transparently blend any of the layers in your image together so that you can see underneath, you need to use the Gradient tool. It's also very helpful for getting that smooth transition from one thing to another. You can start by just choosing a color and dragging from the Foreground/Background tab to the Background tab, in order to create the whole area of the image as one color. (As mentioned above, it can be any color.) Then you can click on the Gradient tool again, which opens up the Gradient tool again. This lets you select the colors you want to move from and to, which changes the gradient as it changes. Just pick the colors you want to create the gradient from and to (from the Foreground/Background tab, then drag right down to the Background tab), and you've just created a gradient. 933d7f57e6
