Hey there everyone, I just wanted to say thanks for the great review and reviews of Lightroom 5. Bag of Lightroom is the best and I can't wait for the final release this week! I do offer some substantial changes. I wanted to tell you all for the Lightroom 5.5, I have recently bought some new Nik software. It is the VSC 4, and I love it. I'd never used Nik software before when shooting my DSLRs. I use MS Word for around 15 minutes. A typical shoot, I look at my camera or laptop every few mins and all I do in Lightroom is crop out a few photos and little do I know, I am doing things in a way which is incredibly beneficial to my output, and really only the images need to be reviewed. As soon as I touch my DSLR or laptop, I know exactly what tools I will use, and in what order, and which image will be the best to start with when I am done; rather than struggling to remember which one I should do first etc. I'm thinking for the Lightroom 5.5, there may be some additional awards, I would like to add in some more specific Lightroom adjustments, could you do me a favour, and look out for these. Thank you. Lately since 5.1, the performance of the UI has been very slow. It is as if it is dressing up old software.

My personal opinion is that you don't need to offer so much for so little. A cleaned-up version of 5.2 should have been enough. Well done anyway. The new My Photo Stream is a neat feature. The app retrieves photos from your Mac or iOS device and puts them in Photoshop. You can also have the app access photos available through Adobe Camera Raw and speed up the workflow by having them available there. The software is optimized for Apple's devices. That way it's easier to share photos from your iPad Pro.

You can also change them to blend modes to achieve a look that you're interested in. For example, you can keep using dodge, but slowly change the color. This way, the selected layers will gradually change colors, and you can simply turn it off at any time. There are also other blending operations you can use, such as erasing colors, reducing saturation, and increasing local contrast. Either way, it's important to experiment with different blending options and try different techniques. Have fun and have fun with Photoshop, and you'll see it pay off in the end. Here's a quick look at some other options: The new Adobe Camera Raw 12 is your first stop for getting beautiful, top-quality images from your camera. Adobe Camera Raw 12 is a remarkable update to the industry-standard RAW tool, with your camera file as the starting point and nothing else.

Adobe Camera Raw's powerful RAW converter opens your camera files and lets you edit and enhance them for optimal results. You can enhance the exposure, lighten dark areas and shadows, adjust colors, and more. You can also apply camera-specific effects such as a Nikon selective-flash image or the full complement of portrait lenses and accessories. You can also organize and make the most of your image libraries.

If you are a film or TV professional, you can access all your camera's metadata and monitor the progress of your image processing right on the screen. Sound cool? It is!
