I was unable to find the answer to this anywhere. Every API that I know of only has a quota of the amount of items that you can have. However, it appears that the S3 list API has a 500 item limit. Any way around this? According to this, it doesn't look like there is a way around it. A: You can specify the MaxKeys directive to get around the limitations of the List operation: The maximum size of the list (maxKeys) must be a number between 1 and 500. If specified, the number of items currently in the list must be less than this maximum. For a list of log entries, use the LogStreams directive. This doesn't impose a size limit but it does cause any entries returned to be truncated. You will need to specify the continuation token, which you can get from the response metadata for the list operation. Note that pagination is only available if there is only one page of results to return. You can find more information about this in Amazon's documentation (scroll down to the "MaxKeys" section): Activ
