As symptomatology and the process of nerve injury are affected by host factors, we sought to assess levels of immunologic activation and lymphocyte abnormalities in a group of subtype B-infected patients with peripheral neuropathy. Among 17 patients in whom the diagnosis of neuropathy was confirmed, 12 had HIV disease and 5 had idiopathic peripheral neuropathy (IPN). Lumbar puncture, quantitative analysis of serum immunoglobulins and flow cytometric analysis of peripheral lymphocytes were performed in all patients to assess immunologic status. Serum IgG levels were significantly lower in the group with HIV neuropathy than in those with IPN. None of the patients with HIV disease had polyclonal hypergammaglobulinemia; however, 3 had low levels of serum IgA and a significant number had a deficiency in the ratio of IgG4 to IgG1. Nine of 12 patients with HIV neuropathy had a decreased B-cell percentage. Patients with HIV neuropathy did not differ in the presence of lymphocytosis from those with IPN. These findings suggest a relationship between HIV infection and polyclonal B-cell hyperactivity that may be associated with more generalized immunologic dysfunction. The immunologic analysis also revealed a significant but subclinical degree of subgroup specificity of immune abnormalities in subtype B-infected patients.
