think it would be highly suspect to use a current event as the starting point for a plan for, say, 2012. And, what of those on the left who have a problem with the fact that "the state" has so controlled the schools and the media that "less" than 4 percent of US scientists are "voters"? It sounds as if you're suggesting that radical neo-confederates, like those on the right, are better at forming "answers" to current events than others. I would think that ideas and plans need "answers" before they are "envisioned". I also fail to see what the purpose of this discussion is. Clearly, your "decency" is not "instinctive", just as is your outrage against the violent and money-driven power grab that is our current Republican administration. So, "decency" can have multiple interpretations, depending on the point of view. Furthermore, I can't recall any reports that the "
